NEW PRESIDENT IS INAUGURATED

while the class of 1882, which exalted itself because President Hibben was one of them, had a special room to itself in the same building. The others gathered early in front of old Nassau Hall and took the sun while envying the elect who were to sit in the shade of the ivy walls on the platform.

Even Princeton Gasped when that dignified procession began. Any color you might desire stood out on the caps and gowns of austere degree men and learned doctors.

Professor William Libby, as grand marshal, led, and behind him walked President Taft at the right of President Hibben.

Very slowly and very dignifiedly the procession wound its way through the walks and turned at the front of the old hall, once the seat of the United States government. Only one little thing happened here which might have been embarrassing if it had not been saved by grins. As the President turned to climb into the stand, the band, a vigorous one, was playing "Maryland, My Maryland." The President lower lip dropped as he heard the inspiring strains, and it looked as if he were smothering a smile, but it passed off soon.

tinguished delegates from the other institutions, who had come to wish good fortune to the new President, and they fairly glittered with the color of their gowns.

The guests of the university followed the delegates. Then came the faculty, the graduate Council, the inauguration committee, and the class of 1882, which marched very proudly. After the band had delivered itself of a march from Athalia, and a choir of young men had sung a chorale by Palestrina, Dr. Henry Van Dyke read a scriptural lesson very solemnly and then prayed for the university and the health and prosperity of the president, after which Justice Pitney administered the oath.

"I feel a sense of exultation and of satisfaction at the kindness and honor, which this great and learned body has conferred upon me. But the sense of pride which comes is wholly devoid of personality. I know that the thought which has inspired this invitation for me to come to-day to take the degree of this university, is a thought of love of country, of reverence, and of respect for that great office of which I happen simply to be the temporary occupant, and which represents the permanence and stability, and the perpetuation of our free institutions."

The chief justice then recalled that George Washington had come out of the door behind him, and he could not help but wish that Washington might come out of that door now, to the chair which his successor was so ably filling and see how the country was faring.

Then the dean again arose and presented William Howard Taft. The President then received the orange and black hood over his blue hood, and stepping forward amid cheers briefly addressed the crowd.

The oath to the president of Princeton, as administered by the justice, is most solemn and impressive, but solemnity was dispelled by the thunderous yells and cheers which followed the bow of the new president as the justice took his seat. And then appeared John Altkman Stewart, who bore in his hands the ancient charter and seals of the university which were given by the Province of New Jersey, in 1748, and with them went the keys of Nassau Hall, which were fashioned in 1755.

There were more cheers now, and President Hibben bowed again and again before he had a chance to begin his address. Every word of it was listened to with interest because they all knew or suspected that it would contain the declaration of principles which seem to have won out at the university, and as he spoke he was stopped frequently by the applause. They liked that idea of "making a man" and they liked that about the broad general training.

Law Violated, But No One's Indicted

When President Hibben finished, Dean West arose and presented for the degree of doctors of laws, honoris causa, Edward Douglass White, Chief Justice of the United States. After President Hibben had repeated the Latin formula over to him and the hood had been draped on his ample shoulders, Chief Justice White said:

"The jury's investigation of the election leads to the conclusion that it was honestly conducted by both voters and officers, and nothing the jury has learned has caused them to distrust any one officially connected with the election."

"It appears to the jury that the judges and clerks have been selected by the city committee for their intelligence and fitness for their respective positions, and have honestly conducted an election, which has reflected the will of the people."

"The jury fully appreciates the difficulties which naturally surrounded them owing to the many transfers incident to the new map of the city, but they met the exigencies, and if a few errors crept in they were innocently admitted."

"The jury found the officers and clerks eager to assist them in the examination, and were impressed with the idea that they shared equally in their desires to solve any question propounded by the grand jury."

"The evidence shows that the ballots which were outside of the polls were taken from the office of the printer, to be used as guides, with apparently no illegal intent, but it was clearly a violation of the law, and it was expressly prohibited by the primary plan, and proved that sufficient safeguards are not thrown around the ballot, and the plan declaring that the printing should be scrupulously guarded was not strictly adhered to."

election was honestly conducted.

"He did not see any of the candidates in the polls, nor did he see any one of them doing anything contrary to law. The stray ticket was handed to him by a friend about a block and a half from the polls, accidentally. He tore off the top and bottom of it so as to prevent its use other than a guide ticket, and only used it once."

"The jury found four Jefferson Ward ballots and three or four ballots of other wards of the city. Every ballot was traced and it was proved conclusively that none of them were voted and that the Jefferson Ward ballots were used only as memorandums. The ballots from the other wards were not used and came into the possession of the jury in a torn condition."

Found No Illegal Act.

"The jury believe that they secured all the ballots which had strayed."

"Means should be provided to keep the ballots alone in the possession of those whose duty it is to prevent any from going astray."

"The jury can find no legal act that has been willfully committed by any of the candidates or their friends."

"We have used our best efforts to detect fraud, tracing closely all rumors which have reached us through the press and otherwise."

"The jury believe that the election was conducted with a fairness commensurate with the conditions that surrounded the officers of the election, being the first to be held under the new four-ward system."

"Having performed the duty assigned us by the court, we ask to be discharged from further consideration of this matter."

[Special to The Times-Dispatch.] Boston, Mass., May 11—If Governor Foss decides to recommend to his council the petition of the Rev. C. V. T. Richeson for leniency, it will be done Wednesday at 3:15 o'clock, when the council meets at the State House. It will be the last time the council will meet, unless a special session is called before the date set for Richeson's execution in the electric chair of his crime of murdering Avis Linnell.

That Governor Foss will present the petition Wednesday, if at all, was learned authoritatively, but not officially, at the State House this evening from one of the Governor's secretaries who has handled all the papers in the Richeson case.

The question of whether Richeson shall be executed has become such an engrossing topic here and throughout New England that local stakeholders are taking hundreds of dollars in bets either way. Since Richeson was examined this afternoon by the four alienists—Dr. Morton Prince, Dr. William Steadman, Dr. Henry Frost, and Dr. George T. Tuttle—and various reports have been circulated to the effect that they found nothing radically wrong with Richeson mentally, there are a score of places in Boston where odds of 12 to 7 are being given that Richeson will die in the chair during the week beginning May 15, or within sixty days thereafter.
